

WHY STICK TO THE WRISTS?

REPORT BY ELLIE LEVENSON

WATCHES ARE BEING WORN ROUND THE NECK, ON NECKLACES, BRACELETS AND CUFFS AS DESIGNERS COPY SOME OF THE EARLIEST TIMEPIECE TRENDS

You can't see your watch on your wrist, but you can see it on your neck. In a world where smartphones are the primary timekeepers, designers are looking for new ways to tell the time. Some are turning to the neck, where watches have been worn since ancient times. Others are using bracelets and cuffs, which were also popular in the past. The result is a new wave of timepieces that are both functional and fashionable.

WITH SO MANY WAYS TO TELL THE TIME, WRISTWATCHES ARE LOSING THEIR PLACE AS THE NECESSARY ITEM FOR TIMEKEEPING

For many years, the wristwatch was the only way to tell the time. It was a convenient and practical way to keep track of the day. But now, there are so many other ways to tell the time that wristwatches are losing their place as the necessary item for timekeeping. Some people prefer to wear watches on their necks, while others prefer to wear them on their wrists. There are also watches that can be worn on your fingers or even on your ankles. The possibilities are endless.

Masterpieces

For more information, visit our website at www.masterpieces.com

Company: EX Time

Publication: Daily Telegraph

Date: Nov 07

Demographic: 25-65 male/female

Circulation: ABC 840 244

Subject: Clip & Rip

Details: Featured in supplement on new watch designs

Publisher: The Telegraph Group